概要

With a number of major international events planned to be held in Japan in the near future, such as the Rugby World Cup scheduled for later this year, the 2020 Summer Olympics and Expo 2025, as well as overall increasing government and industry pressure to create globally competent human resources at the higher education level, the need to raise awareness of global issues among students seems apparent. Yet, such need is often overlooked in EFL classrooms, in favour of developing and reinforcing the more traditional four skills. This presentation will consider why and how global issues awareness can be incorporated in existing curricula in both listening/speaking and reading/writing classes. It will provide concrete examples of issues addressed and how they can be linked to textbook units, as well as of assessment options and resources available to those interested in actively incorporating global issues in the classroom.
