International Students' Message

Third-year student (Ph.D. Degree Program) in the Graduate School of East Asian Cultures

QIU JI (邱吉) Country/region: China

The Kansai University Senriyama Campus's library boasts holdings of some 2 million volumes, including renowned Naito, Masuda Wataru, and Hakuen collections, making it a treasure house of research sources for international students. Other major components of Kansai University's appeal are an educational and research environment that includes state-of-the-art IT equipment, a location in an area surrounded by natural beauty, and an expansive campus that comprises an excellent learning environment.

The Graduate School of East Asian Cultures, to which I belong, offers three areas of research: East Asian Languages and Visual Representation, "East Asian thought and Organization," and "East Asian History and Dynamics." Thanks to numerous opportunities to present research findings at universities overseas in Italy, the Czech Republic, China, and South Korea, the program is a great way to broaden one's knowledge. I'm studying the history of artistic exchanges between Japan and China, a subject that spans multiple fields including history, philology, and art. The most interesting class is "Research in Cultural Exchange," which is part of the East Asian Languages and Visual Representation program. Though the course I've learned about research in cultural exchange studies as well as the joy of art appreciation, and it offered me new opportunities for research.

As an extracurricular activities, I'm a member of the Foundation of Corporate Friendship Network for Foreign Students. I've participated in various events, including some exploring the Bando School of Japanese dance, a disaster prevention program offered at the Tokyo Fire Department's headquarters, and a tour of the Metropolitan Area Outer Underground Drainage Channel.

I began receiving a scholarship from the Yasuda Scholarship Foundation during my second year in the Master's Degree Program. I was in my first year of the program when I was interviewed by the Foundation. Finishing in second place in the 13th Japanese Writing Contest for Chinese Students, which is hosted by the Center for China-Japan Exchange Studies, was the key to my selection for the scholarship. I've also received a scholarship from the Japan Student Services Organization (JASSO), a Kansai University Global Scholarship, and other funds.

In the future, my goal is to master a range of advanced knowledge and skills so that I can become a university faculty member who plays a leading role in school education. To that end, I'm conducting studies in the field at art and history museums and reading numerous related historical materials. I also participate actively in domestic and overseas symposiums and exchange views with researchers in ways that transcend national borders and research domains to produce more outstanding research results. I would encourage everyone who's interested in attending Kansai University to make their dreams come true, enjoying a research life here

Second-year Media Studies student in the Department of Sociology, Faculty of Sociology Valentino Sylvania

Country/region: Indonesia

The most appealing aspect of Kansai University for me is the rich selection of courses that are available to students. My program, Media Studies, in the Department of Sociology, Faculty of Sociology offers extensive opportunities for practical study so that students can learn not only in the classroom, but also gain practical experience in media. There are also seminars that expose students to the views of people working in the media industry, offering a glimpse at the industry as it operates today. Of the many available courses, the most interesting I've taken so far is "Media and Society." I enjoy this class because it helps me learn about various social phenomena, how these phenomena are expressed in the media, and how they affect people.

Outside of class, I've actively involved in various activities, including "TABITANTEI," an exchange event hosted by the Kansai University Division of International Affairs; language exchanges; and "Japanese Cafe," hosted by KU-Bridge. It's fun for me to interact with international students from other countries and Japanese students through games and quizzes. Such activities are a great way to make friends while studying Japanese and many other languages.

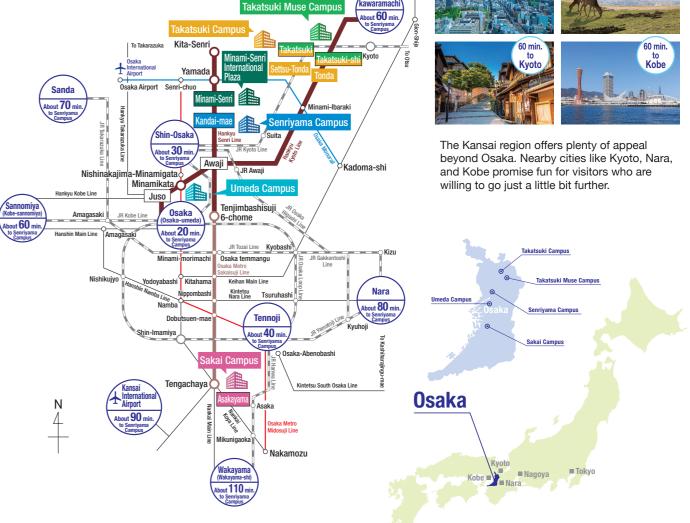

Kansai University offers many types of financial support for international students, and scholarships are especially plentiful. When I applied for the scholarship, the staff of the Division of International Affairs were very attentive to my concerns, and everything went smoothly from the application screening to the interview test, and I was accepted successfully. As a result, I'm now receiving a scholarship from The Daiyukyo Foundation of International Exchange, Assistance & Research

I want to become a newspaper reporter. To that end, I've adopted the habit of watching the news regularly, and I'm deepening my understanding of how today's mass media functions by taking various classes, primarily in the area of the mass media, and participating in practical training programs and seminars. I'm also taking English classes to increase my language skills so that I can gather news overseas.

Studying in Japan may seem like a distant dream to some of you right now due to the pandemic, but challenges like this only make you stronger. Everyone here will support you, so I'd encourage you to follow your dreams without giving up!
