○研究者向け講演会タイトル：The Great Retreat?: Tropical Pastoralism since the late-19th century ○日時：22nd June 2024 ○概要： Savannas or grasslands cover about 20 per cent of the earth's land area, often merging into the desert edge in the world's tropics. Animal herding is usually the only livelihood possible in these lands. Many writers and reports on how this livelihood changed, in the long run, suggest that pastoralism has declined, in some cases, from the colonial era in the nineteenth century, as farmers and city-dwellers grabbed land available for pasture. The long-run land use statistics, however, contradict this narrative. The paper explains why the facts are inconsistent with the narrative and suggests how the narrative needs revision.
○学生向け講演会タイトル：Panel Discussion "Global Economic History: A Field in search of a Question" ○日時：4th July 2024 ○概要： Prof. Tirthankar Roy (LSE/Kansai University): Tropical Development and Global Economic History Prof. Kaoru Sugihara (RIHN/Kansai University): The Paradigm Shift in Asian Economic History: From Intra-Asian Trade to Indian Ocean Trade Prof. Takeshi Nishimura (Kansai University): Transformation of Regional Settlement of Payment: From Silver Coins to the Bill of Exchange Professor Roy had a presentation on the recent arguments for the future and potential of global history studies, based on Indian economic history research. He explained to the students the importance of taking a bigger picture view of historical events. Sugihara had a presentation on the paradigm shift in Asian economic history. He emphasized that when studying the economic history of Asia, it needs to be viewed in the Indo-Pacific rather than the Asia-Pacific. Nishimura had a presentation on the content of a paper to be contributed to a collection of articles edited by Sugihara.
