概要

Teaching reading is one of the most important areas in EFL and EAP instruction. Learners need to be exposed to a wide range of texts and tasks aiming at helping them become more effective readers. In this workshop, we will provide an overview of some of the most common reading skills that students need to be aware of in order to approach and understand a text. We will also show the preliminary results of an analysis of how reading skills are presented across different coursebooks used at Kansai University. This analysis is based on both quantitative and qualitative data and aims at having teachers reflect on their own practices when teaching reading by focusing on the quality of the materials we choose for our lessons at Kansai University.
