概要:

Assessing students in foreign language classrooms, particularly their oral skills, is a major challenge for instructors. However, the idea that performance-based assessment (PBA) provides the most valid basis from which to approach the issue has gained broad acceptance in the teaching community in recent years. This presentation will outline why this is so, as well as some practical considerations with regard to the implementation of PBA in communicative EFL courses such as the Communication Program at Kansai University. Results from a survey of students in relation to their assessment will be presented and discussed.
